INTRODUCTION.

HE main objects of this work are—first, to enable the 'English reader' to find out the meaning and history of the foreign words and phrases which occur so frequently in English literature; secondly, to register the increase of the English vocabulary directly due to the adoption and naturalisation of foreign words since the introduction of printing; thirdly, to record all English words of foreign origin which have retained or reverted to their native form. The smallness of the staff and the small number of contributors have made it inevitable that these objects should not be fully attained and that the work should be uneven, but it is hoped that the attempts may be found to have met with a satisfactory measure of success. More than 50 per cent. (i.e. more than 6400) of the articles of the Dictionary and Supplement are devoted to the first object, which is popular; while the general public cannot fail to find very many of the remaining articles both useful and interesting even if the second and third objects above mentioned be not widely appreciated.

The term "Anglicised" has been taken to mean (a) 'borrowed and wholly or partly naturalised', as amity, bagatelle, calibre, calico, elegant, flummery, potato; (b) 'used in English literature without naturalisation' (often, however, with more or less mispronunciation), as amour (Mod.), café, embonpoint, enfant terrible, flotilla, genius, non compos mentis, onus probandi; (c) 'familiarised by frequent quotation', such as revenous à nos moutons, littera scripta manet, omne ignotum pro magnifico est, ora pro nobis, which are not Anglicised at all in the strict application of the term, but which it is convenient to include with such phrases as a tort et à travers, amende honorable, enfant terrible, non compos mentis, onus probandi.

Several hundred carefully selected books have been read for the purpose of collecting the literary materials upon which the best part of the work is based.

When the University of Cambridge, in 1882, accepted the bequest of £5000 left by the late Mr J. F. Stanford to be employed in the production of a dictionary of "Anglicised Words and Phrases", the notes and collections made by Mr Stanford himself with a view to such a work were carefully examined. Mr Stanford's interpretation of the term "Anglicised" was found to be very free, in fact equivalent to that given above.

The following Scheme, which fairly represents Mr Stanford's views of the scope of the work which he desired to found, was drawn up by a committee appointed by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, the editor being responsible only for the examples. The Rev. Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, the Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat, Prof. R. L. Bensly, Mr Aldis Wright, and Dr J. P. Postgate took part in the preparation of the Scheme.

SCHEME.

It is proposed that this Dictionary, while not professedly including technical terms, embrace:—

- I. All words and phrases of non-European origin¹ found in English literature, if borrowed directly (with or without change of sound or form) from non-European languages:
- e.g. Words: bulbul, bungalow, coffee, fellah, gobang, guinea, khaki, kismet, mahogany, pasha, ratan, proa, sago, selictar, seraph, shwanpan, sofa, tatty, toddy, tomahawk, tom-tom, ukase, umiack, vizier, waddie, wigwam, zenana.
- ¹ Under "words and phrases", throughout this Scheme, are included (a) such foreign proper names as are frequently used as common words, and words formed from foreign proper names, and (b) frequently cited foreign proverbs and short epigrammatic sentiments:
- e.g. (a) Names, &c.: Alexander, Bordeaux, cicerone, Hector, Machiavellian, Mentor, pasquinade, philippie, shaloon, Sybarite, tontine, Vandal, vestal, volt, Zolaism.
- (b) Phrases: ce n'est que le premier pas qui coste, cosa fatta capo ha, ohne Hast ohne Rast, omne ignotum pro magnifico est.
- 2. All Latin and Greek words which retain their original form², and all Latin and Greek phrases, in use in English literature:
- e.g. Words: animal, anemone, antennae, aroma, augur, cpitome, genius, habitat, index, medium, omnibus, pallor, paraphernalia, phalanx, premium, radius, ratio, scoria, sinciput, siren, thesis, toga, tribunal, vertigo, zeugma.

Phrases: ad amussim, deus ex machina, flagrante delicto, hoc age, particeps criminis, per annum, timeo Danaos et dona ferentes, vade mecum, viva voce, ariston men hudor, hoi polloi, hysteron proteron, παθήματα μαθήματα, τὸ πᾶν.

- ² That is in general their original spelling:
- e.g. Aloe, conclave, &c., keep their old spelling but have lost their last syllable. We pronounce query and quaere, ether and aether, sulphur and sulfur identically, so that query, ether, sulphur keep their form with altered spelling. Such cases are rare. In most cases words which retain the original spelling of the Latin or Greek termination will be included. Words borrowed directly from Greek, as anaesthesia, hydrophobia, are regarded as unaltered in spite of the Latin method of transliteration.
- 3. All words and phrases borrowed directly from modern European⁸ languages excepting French:
- e.g. Words: antic, barouche, droitzschka, Ewigkeit, floe, fresco, frowe, geyser, guerilla, palaver, passado, polka, poodle, quass, ranche, regatta, roster, schnapps, senhora, veneer, waltz, yacht, Zeitgeist.
 - N.B. Turkish is regarded as non-European.

Phrases: alla moderna, che sara sara, ragione del stato, rosso antico, se non è vero è ben trovato, volti subito, auf wiedersehen, Sturm und Drang.

- ³ Including modern importations from the Celtic dialects which still survive in Great Britain:
- e.g. acushla, cairn, capercailzie, cromlech, dolmen, eric, gillie, kerne, loch, shebeen, shillelagh, skean, teague, Tory.
- 4. All words and phrases borrowed from the French which retain the French pronunciation⁴:
- e.g. Words: chignon, coup, ennui, espièglerie, gendarme, jardinière, lorgnette, naïveté, penchant, razzia, soupçon, viveur, vol-au-vent.

Phrases: à outrance, cul de sac, de rigueur, enfant terrible, je ne sais quoi, noblesse oblige, revenons à nos moutons, sauve qui peut, tableau vivant, tour de force.

- ⁴ Words which approximately retain a definite characteristic French pronunciation of one prominent syllable or more will be included:
 - e.g. aigrette, bagatelle, chagrin, chevron, envelope, guitar, hotel, ormolu, prestige, terreen.
- 5. All words borrowed from French, Latin, and Greek, since the introduction of printing, whether now altered or but imperfectly naturalised and now obsolete.
- ⁵ That is, (a) all words borrowed from the French, which, having apparently come into use after A.D. 1470 (for 1471), are found in French form before A.D. 1612 (chosen so as to include Cotgrave's French-English Dictionary), or afterwards in French form in italics, &c., though their form or pronunciation or both be now altered; (b) all changed Latin and Greek words whose original form is found not earlier than 1470.
 - e.g. (a) cab, kickshaws, passport, scene, sequel, synod, toupee, vivify; (b) centaur, pyramid, syntax, tetrastich.

The work shall not professedly include dialectic forms.

An asterisk is to be prefixed to every article for which materials were found in Mr Stanford's collections, which materials in many cases consist of a number of extracts from periodical literature and newspapers. An asterisk is also to be prefixed to all quotations taken from Mr Stanford's collections.

Articles which deal with the fifth section of the Scheme have presented most serious difficulties, the words in question having been let alone by nearly all the few voluntary contributors, so that illustrative quotations have fallen seriously short just where they were in many respects most important. In very many cases there has been danger of including words which ought to be excluded because they prove to be, or will eventually prove to be, Middle English; as there is—with the notable exception of the New English Dictionary (A—Consigner and E—Every) edited by Dr J. A. H. Murray and Mr Henry Bradley—no full register of Middle English words derived from Latin and French. Consequently, as the Stanford E was worked off before the Part E—Every of the New English Dictionary came out, five words which have been included prove to have been found in Middle English, namely, emblem, evacuation, evacue, evagation, evaporation. However, only two instances of evacue (from the same author) are given in the Middle English period, and only one instance of the four other words*. It is therefore possible that about 30 words would have been wrongly inserted up to Casse but for the information supplied by the New English Dictionary. It appears also that elope should have been excluded as a case of adaptation from Anglo-French instead of being included according to the previously current derivation from Dutch. On the other hand, efforce (sb.), efforce (vb.), elegance, epilogation, equipare, erode, erosion, and esquadron ought all probably to have been added under the fifth section of the Stanford Scheme to the 72 items of the kind which have been treated in the Stanford Dictionary between E-Every. The nouns ending in -or which have become or are becoming identical in spelling with Latin nominative forms in -or-such as actor, administrator, contributor, error, honor, minor, posterior, sponsor-have proved particularly troublesome, as many of them were Middle English derivatives from Anglo-French or French, and it seemed only fair to the public to take such merely English derivatives as abrogator, alliterator, commiserator, which, as to form, range with the words which come directly from Latin nominatives in -or or ultimately from accusatives in -orem. The indebtedness of the Stanford Dictionary to the New English Dictionary (up to Cassa) and to other dictionaries is especially heavy with regard to these words and those treated under the fifth section of the Scheme, both as to illustrative quotations and items of vocabulary (possibly 10 per cent. of the latter being due to the New English Dictionary up to Cassa). This portion of the work has been the least satisfactory, but still in many of the articles in question there has been compensatory success in supplementing previous researches, as for instance under abarre, +abatement, +abbreviator, abdicator, +abettor, +abstersive, +acceptance, accorage, accrue, +accumulator, +adage, +adhere, adjournment, +adulterator, +aggregator, ample, amplitude, amity, amusement, anatomist, animator, annotator, anomal, anterior, antiphonal, aper(i)tive, apostrophe (Gram.), appetitive, architector, architector, artifice, artist, atheism, attentive, attractive, ball, cannonade, cataplasm, catarrh, cavalry, caveson, censor, cerote, citadel, citron, cornice, director, emigrator, epithem, coode, equipage, escalade, csmotion, csplanade, cstafette, estimator, etiquette, exiture, expulse, facility, falsify, fruition, gallery, &c.

In cases of doubt whether a word is of French or Latin origin, it has been assumed that ecclesiastical words and words which occur first (so far as the incomplete evidence suggests) in translations from the Latin are rather adapted from Latin than adopted from French, and such words have accordingly been excluded. Words which are adapted from Latin, Greek, and French, are regarded as English coinages, following English models, the original adapter or adapters being no doubt in many cases quite unconscious that a fresh item was being added to the English vocabulary. Such adapted forms which made their first appearance in English dress are not included in this work, which professes to deal only with words and phrases which have appeared in foreign garb in English literature.

With regard to exotic words‡—such rare specimens as are explained when used have been, as a rule, excluded; except in the case of names of vehicles, vessels, implements, coins, and commodities, which have no English names and seemed likely to be imported. For instance, jinrikisha was admitted long before the correspondence in the daily papers on the feasibility of introducing jinrikishas into London.

^{*} The following table shows the dates of the one or two earliest 'Stanford' quotations for these words and of Mr Bradley's two or three earliest quotations:

[†] For these words see also the Supplement.

[†] That is to say, words which have been neither wholly nor partially naturalised; such as names of foreign institutions, of articles which are unknown in Great Britain, or only seen in museums and collections, of foreign offices and dignities, &c., and foreign words which are sekdom or never used except by writers addicted to interlarding their pages with foreign words and phrases.

had to trust to their memory to decide whether an exotic word or a phrase for which no quotation or only one had been found was sufficiently common in literature to be taken, and again they have often had to divine whether a word or phrase seemed likely to become more common than it was, so far as they knew, at the time it was under consideration. It would have been an endless and useless task to record all the words by which modern travellers and novelists have sought to give 'local coloring' to their narratives, such as numerous native words meaning 'milk', 'meat', 'rice', 'grass', 'horse', 'father', 'priest', &c., which have not been and are never likely to be Anglicised or to become familiar in English speech or literature. It has been thought well to omit geographical names applied only or mainly in trade to exports or in finance to stocks and shares; such as Demerara (sugar).

Many of the words which have been treated have severally developed in English a group of derivatives. No notice has been taken of such derivatives; e.g. echo and naive have been treated, but not echo, vb., echoic, echoless, echoy, naïvely, naïvely.

A great many technical terms, which are employed in the fine arts, architecture, the drama, history, music, and rhetoric, appear with comparative frequency in general literature. Such terms therefore have been more freely admitted than terms relating to other arts and sciences.

The Syndics of the University Press, who settled the form and method of the Stanford Dictionary, decided to confine the etymology in the main to the indication of the language from which a word or phrase has been borrowed and of its native form and meaning, unless there was some fresh light to be thrown upon a derivation. Accordingly there are not very many full etymological paragraphs, but several of those which have been given will be found interesting, vis. those under Abdalli, abdat, Abracadabra, Alchochoden, alerce, aliquot, almuten, avast, burgoo, chemist, complot, elixir, fanal, hubbub, sentinel, stockade, tornado, while the assignment of a word to its native tongue supported by the illustrative quotations often corrects current derivations. For instance, many words hitherto derived from French have been assigned to Italian or Spanish; e.g. comrade, crimson, scimetar.

With regard to forms in -ado, it is in many cases difficult to determine whether a noun is borrowed from a Spanish form in -ada or an Italian form in -ada (Mod. It. -ata). Mr R. Seymour Conway has supplied a reference to Gröber's Grundr. d. Roman. Philologie, Bd. 1. p. 530, § 69. These earlier Italian -ada's have hitherto been ignored by English etymologists, though Florio gives several, e.g. panada, pomada, scalada (as well as panata, pomata, scalata), frisada, rodomontada. It is therefore almost certain that there were once in Italian the forms gambada, stoccada, strappada, and possibly passada, &c. In the 15th and 16th, and even the 17th and 18th centuries, unaccented Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian a's were often turned into o's in English loan-words, as in the forms bagatello, bardello, barrico, berlino, bonano, borasco, botargo, chopine, comrade, grotto, hollock, junto, montero, potato, primero, salvo (artillery), stockade, tobacco, tobardillo, umbrello, visto.

The accentuation of naturalised words has been approximately indicated by using – to represent an unaccented syllable, 'to represent an accented syllable, "to represent a comparatively strongly accented syllable. If the mark 'or " be repeated with regard to the pronunciation of one word, it is not implied that the two stresses are quite equal, nor is it implied that all syllables marked as unaccented have precisely the same stresslessness.

About 100,000 illustrative quotations with dates and references have been collected, over 30,000 having been supplied by voluntary contributors, and of the total amount some 40,000 have been used. The date of composition or first publication is placed before a quotation. The date of the edition used (if not the first) is placed in brackets after the reference; in the case of reprints the date of the edition reprinted (if not the first) is placed before the reference.

Quotations from general literature which have been taken from other dictionaries have been specially acknowledged except in a few awkward cases (e.g. when a correction has been made upon verification) and perhaps in two or three instances (one has been discovered) through oversight. Indebtedness to dictionaries in respect of quotations from other dictionaries, cyclopaedias, glossaries, and works for which full indexes or concordances are available has not been specially acknowledged. A few such quotations or references are due to the New English Dictionary and to Prof. Skeat's Etymological Dictionary. Up to Cassz a very large number of literary quotations has been borrowed from the New English Dictionary, most of which have been specially acknowledged; and the editor is also indebted to that colossal and admirable work for several Old French forms, for the suggestion of some books, and for the names and addresses of persons likely to help. The high standard of excellence set by this work must influence all succeeding dictionaries relating to the English language, in sundry ways which it is not easy to specify in a short compass. The late Col. Yule's Hobson-Jobson has been a great help in the treatment of Anglo-Indian words. In the etymological treatment of Persian and Semitic words Prof. W. Robertson Smith has supplied almost everything of value; while the Rev. G. W. Collins gave useful assistance in this branch at the outset of the work. Cassell's Encyclopædic Dictionary and the 'Century' Dictionary have continually been consulted with advantage.

For careful revision and very many valuable suggestions the editor is under great obligations to Dr Henry Jackson (Trinity College, Cambridge); Prof. W. Robertson Smith (Christ's College, Cambridge); Mr R. J. Whitwell (Kendal); and to the Readers of the University Press.

Illustrative quotations from the following contributors are gratefully acknowledged:--From the Rev. J. Pierson, D.D. (Librarian of Alma College, Michigan, U.S.A.), about 12,000; from the Rev. W. H. Beckett (Chelmsford), over 4000; from Miss R. H. Busk. over 3000; from Mr J. Randall, over 2000; from the Rev. Dr A. Smythe Palmer (Woodford) and the Rev. Benjamin Talbot (Columbus, Ohio, U.S.A.), over 1000 each; from the Rev. H. Thurston, S.J. (St Asaph), Mr F. G. F. Hutt, Mr R. J. Whitwell, Mr R. F. Sketchley (West Kensington), Miss Foxall (Edgbaston, Birmingham), Miss Gunning (Cambridge), several hundred each; from Dr J. A. H. Murray, Dr F. J. Furnivall, Dr Henry Phillips, Junr. (Philadelphia, U.S.A.), Miss Haig (Stirling), Mrs Stuart (Edinburgh), Miss Wilkinson (Cambridge), over 100 each; from the Rev. J. Smallpeice (St Bees. Carnforth), about 100; together with smaller quantities from Mr G. L. Apperson (Wimbledon), Mr J. Dykes Campbell (Kensington Gore), Dr R. S. Charnock (New Thornton Heath, Surrey), Mrs Damant (Cowes), Mr H. Johnson (Cambridge), Mr J. Y. Johnson (Funchal, Madeira), the Rev. W. J. Löwenberg (Bury, Lancs.), the Rev. A. L. Mayhew (Oxford), Mr M. Pearson (Frisby-on-the-Wreke, Leicester), Miss Margaret Westmacott, Mr R. I. Whitely (Plymouth), the Rev. W. B. R. Wilson (Dollar).

Prof. J. E. B. Mayor (St John's College, Cambridge) has kindly permitted the editor to use two richly annotated editions of Johnson's Dictionary.

Information on special points has been kindly furnished by Mr E. G. Browne, the Rev. Prof. G. F. Browne, Miss R. H. Busk, Prof. E. B. Cowell, the Rev. T. C. Fitzpatrick, Prof. T. McKenny Hughes, Dr A. H. Mann, the Rev. A. L. Mayhew (Irish etymologies), Prof. J. H. Middleton, Prof. A. Newton, Mrs Salmon, the Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat, Prof. Sir T. F. Wade, K.C.B., Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P. (the Attorney-General), Prof. C. E. Wilson, Sir H. T. Wood, K.C.B., Mr W. Aldis Wright, and others.

The editor's assistant, Mr F. G. F. Hutt, has displayed quite a genius for the kind of work, and his able and enthusiastic help has proved throughout of the highest value.

The Dictionary, including the Supplement, contains 12,798 articles (which treat of 13,018 words and phrases) and 2708 cross-references. The 12,798 articles are concerned with 10,927 words, 1813 phrases, and 278 quotations, proverbs, or maxims. The distinction between 'word' and 'phrase' has been in many cases arbitrary, as also, in fewer instances, has been that between 'phrase' and 'quotation'.

The 13,018 words and phrases comprise:—

French*	2617	Turkish, &c	147
Latin*	3797	Aramaic, Ethiopic, Hebrew	133
Greek*	495	Dravidian	31
Italian	1199	Malay	47
Spanish	716	Russian	48
Portuguese	153	Chinese	25
Dutch	155	Japanese	27
German	205	African	31
Scandinavian	33	American Indian, &c	81
Celtic	113	Various languages from which
Hindoo	336	only a few words are taken	134
Sanskrit	32	(from French 1380)
Persian	162	English* (from Latin 653)	2076
Arabic	225	(from Greek 43)

Y The French words which have not been naturalised, and the Latin and Greek words which have kept or reverted to their native form, are here classed separately from words derived from French or Latin, which have been altered or naturalised; as very many words of the class in question are homologous with words which have been introduced too early or too late to be included in this work (see p. vii.). Words borrowed from other languages, whether adopted or adapted, are all counted together.

ā mājōri, -e [ad minus], phr.: Lat.: 'from the greater' (to the less), of an argument to the effect that what applies to the greater of any persons or things applies with stronger reason to the less; opposite to a minori ad majus 'from the less to the greater'.

1580 What shall we say to such a Chrysippus, as alloweth not the argument a majoribus [pl.]: FULKE, Anatures, p. 204 (1848). 1614 The Apostle proved soundly by an argument a majori and minus that the Church might ordaying & dispose of secular indigments: T. FULKERER, T. Rep. to Widdensyton, ch. 10, p. 2. 1618. God doth it for most first ends, and thus a redition might be framed, saith he, a majori ad minus: P. BANKE, Com. Ephes., Nichol's Ed., p. 41.2 (1824). 1656 The argument by which he contuted them is drawn a majori ad minus, from the greater to the less: N. HARIN, at the F. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 41.2 (1895). 1682 yet it is an argument fetched a majori, not a lare opposition only: Th. Goodwin, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand, Divines, Vul, vii. p. 60 (1664).

ā malo in pējus, phr.: Lat.: 'from bad to worse'.

K. Kane, 1st Grinn. Exped., ch. XXXIV. p. 309

ā minori, -e [ad mājus], phr.: Lat.: 'from the less to the greater'. See quotations and a majori.

1549 We have a manner of reasoning in the Schools, and it is called a minore ad manus, "from the less to the more": LATIMER, Sermons, p. 166 (Parker Soc, 1844). ?1550 For me thought thou was framyng an argument à minori ad manus, or to be bettei understoode à delegato ad ordinarium: W. P., Tr. Curio's Pass, in a Tranuce, p. 3 v. 1572 it may be an argument a parious, but not a minori; as you seem to make it: Whittelft, Wks., Vol. II p. 96 (1852), 1580 This is a notable and sententious comparison, 'A minore ad majus': E. Kirke, in Spens. Shep Cal., Nov. Glosse, Wks., p. 483 (1869). 1652 And thus the Apostle tacitely insinuates an argument, à minore ad majus. N. Culterweil, Light of Nat., Treat., p. 5. 1696 An argument a minori ad majus is strong with God: D. Clarkson, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. I. p. 190 (1864). bef 1733 the Argument a minori. R. accent ($\angle =$), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr.: prominent or expressive intonation.

1. melodic intonation of the syllables of each word according to fixed general laws and fixed customs as to individual words.

The old Greek and old Latin had three varieties of accent produced by two varieties of pitch, differing in Greek, according to Dionysius Halicarnassius, by about a fifth. The laws and habits of melodic intonation differ in different languages and even in different dialects. The syllable in old Greek which was uttered on the high pitch was said to have the acute accent ($\delta_{\text{log}} \text{ approx} \delta_{\text{log}} \text{ and ended on the low pitch, marked by "over the vowel of the accented syllable. The syllables of a word which were pronounced without either of these accents were uttered on the low pitch, the grave accent ($\delta_{\text{log}} \delta_{\text{log}} \text{ approx} \delta_{\text{log}} \text{ with were pronounced without either of these accents user uttered on the low pitch, the grave accent ($\delta_{\text{log}} \delta_{\text{log}} \delta_{\text{log}} \text{ with were pronounced without either of these accents user uttered on the low pitch, the grave accent ($\delta_{\text{log}} \delta_{\text{log}} \delta_{\text{log}} \text{ with when the acute accent of a final syllable was changed to a grave accent in connected speech. The high pitch in Greek and Latin never came earlier than the last syllable but two, the antepenultimate, and never occurred more than once in a single word. The high pitch may have been accompanied by some stress. About A.D. 300 melodic accent in Latin and Greek gave place to stress accent, which has l 1589 that other which seemed in part to lift vp and in parts to fall downe, they called the circumflex, or compast accent: Puttenham, Eng. Poss., II. vi. 65 (1811).

2. stress accent, a comparatively forcible utterance of one or more syllables in a word, fixed for each word by national custom according to sundry laws.

English exhibits two, if not three, varieties of strength of stress, as in anti-christianity ($^{\prime\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$ $^{\prime}$), the strongest accent in a word being called primary, the rest secondary.

II. adj.: answering to the sb. The earliest spelling is accessary, fr. the Lat., and therefore the adj. does not come within the scope of this work.

Variants, 15 c. accessorie, accersorie, 16 c.—19 c. accessary.

[Apparently adopted from Legal Anglo-Fr. accessorie, sb., accessori, adj. (found by Skeat in Year-books of Ed. I.'s reign, yrs. xx. xxi. Horwood, Record Ser., 1866, p. 161; yrs. xxxii. xxxiii. ib., 1864, p. 385). The form accessary, as if fr. Lat. with the more usual termination of words of this class (namely -ārius), seems to be rarer bef. 1600. The Anglo-Fr. accessorie, Fr. accessoire, may be due to confusion between quasi-Lat. accessārius and Late Lat. accessōrius as if fr. accessor noun of agent to accedere, = 'to come to'. The word was very likely in use in English before Caxton used it and accessarye {1480 Chron. Eng., vii. 157 b/1 (1520). N. E. D.}. In sense 2 probably direct fr. Lat., cf. 1614 T. FITZHERBERT, Rep. to Widdrington, ch. 2, p. 33; that axiome of the law accessorium sequitur principale, = 'the accessory follows the principal'.]

1666 Knipp [doing] the widow very well and will be an excellent actor:
Pepys, Diary, Dec. 27.

[From early Eng. actour (as if from Anglo-Fr. actour, but the Fr. acteur is later in Littré), fr. Lat. actor (noun of agent to agere, ='to drive', 'to manage', 'to do', 'to act') to which the spelling is accommodated. In Lat. sense 3 is earliest, sense 1 latest.]

actrice, sb.: Fr.: a female stage-player, actress. Perhaps regarded as Eng. in 18 c.

actu, actum, actus, abl., acc., and nom. of actus, sb.: Lat.: 'act', 'deed', 'actuality'; used in various techn. phrases. Thus actus primus or actus signatus in Scholastic Logic is the mere designation of an act (sometimes almost =δύναμις, 'potential operation'), opposed to actus secundus or actus exercitus, the actual practice (sometimes almost = ἐνέργεια, 'actual operation').

or actus exercitus, the actual practice (sometimes almost = ivéppeia, 'actual operation').

1616 But these last are rather potentià than actu: J. Chamberlain, in Court & Times of Yas. I., Vol. 1. p. 412 (1848). 1674 Gods dare Essence must be forthwith or actu [in actuality] but his everlasting Essence...must be forthwith or actu [in actuality] but his everlasting Essence...must be forth-coming or in potentià: N. Fairfax, Bulk and Selv., p. 17. 1671 If we consider it in actu signato, or in its abstract idea, this is its temperament: John Howe, Wks., p. 263/2 (1834). 1696 Acts are good in themselves in actu signato: S. Charnock, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. III. p. 205 (1865). 1684 we are active in actu exercito, but not in actu signato: S. Charnock, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. III. p. 205 (1865). 1702 we look upon it [i.e. the covenant] as in actu exercito, viz. as it is now transacted and entered into by the beloved God: John Howe, Wks., p. 10/12 (1834). 1696 but in actu exercito, and as acted by us, they [i.e. acts] cannot be good, without a good principle, a due form, a right end: D. Clarkson, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 114 (1865). 1681—1703 foundations firmly laid in the soul do implicitly work when they are not in actu exercito, or explicitly thought upon: Th. Goodwin, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand Divines, Vol. VIII. p. 187 (1864). 1681 There is the actus primus, or the quickening act of this principle: John Owen, Wks., Vol. II. p. 329 (1826). 1681 This power in 'actu primo', or fundamentally, is in the church itself: ib., Vol. X. p. 378. — This power...in 'actu secundo', or its exercise. [is] in them that are especially called thereunto: ib. 1631—1703 and so to create a workmanship to good works, is to endow the heart to good works, as actus primi, as they are called, as should enliven the heart to good works, as actus revinuing, as they are called, as should enliven the heart to good works, as actus primi (to talk Logic) and seldom in actus secundo: S. Charnock, actus simplex, and purely free from all composition. John Owen, Displ of Irmin, Wks., Vol v. p 63 (Russell, 1826). 1878—80 a certayne solemne venerable grace to my most reverend Regenteshipp when it cumes in actum. Gan. Harrey, Lett. Bb., p 74 (1824). 1852. But in respect of him that is subject to the Law it does consist in actur actions, its required only that he should know it, not in acture, unativits, it does not depend upon his obedience: N. Culverwell, Light of Nat., ch iv p 25. 1699. Though every law proceeds from the will of the lawgiver, and doth formally consist in actu voluntatis, yet it presupposes actum intellectus: S. Charnock, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand Dizures, Vol. v. p 465 (1266)

*actualité, sb.: Fr.: real existence, reality, opposed to potential or to imaginary existence.

1839 we are not going to praise it: it wants vigour, to our taste, and what you call actualité: W. M. THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 142 (1885). 1884 French dramatists lose little time in the production of actualités: Athenaum, Jan. 5, p. 30 r.

actualiter, adv.: Lat.: actually, κατ' ἐντελέχειαν.

1674 God's being as such is altogether in a readiness or actualiter; N. FAIR-FAX, Bulk and Selv., p. 175.

actum agere, phr.: Lat.: to do what is done, to waste time and labour in vain repetition.

1621 you will infer that this is actum agere, an unnecessary work: R Burton, Anat. Mel, To Reader, Vol 1 p 8 (1827) 1648 these things here I must not prove, lest I should actum agere: John Owen, Wks, App., Vol v. p. 56 (Russell, 1826). 1654 to have tied myself unto a contest with him, had been merely actum agere, without promoting the cause I had undertaken in the least: ib., Vol. vi. p. xxi 1662 lest you otherwise seem actum agere, as the word is: Evelvn, Corresp., Vol. III p. 138 (1872) actum est (de), phr.: Lat.: 'it is all over (with)'

1614 Actum est, of him for a common-wealths-man: if hee goe to't in Rime, once: B. Joyson, Bart. Farr, in 5, Wks, Vol II. p 41 (1631—40) bef. 1733 if he can prove his point upon an Authority, so well accepted as this is, actum est: R. North, Examen, 1 i. 8, p. 19 (1740).

[The 3rd pers. neut. sing. perf. ind. pass. of agere, = 'to do', 'act', in phr. with de, prep., = 'of', 'concerning', and abl.]

*acumen, sb.: Lat.: 'keenness', 'sharpness' (Met. of the mind, as often in Lat.), 'shrewdness'.

1573—80 y° suttle and intricate acumen of Aristotle: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 77 (1884) 1599 nothing...doth sooner abate that which we call acumen ingenit, then your grosse fare B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., ii. 3, Wks., p. xo6 (1616). 1689 one Scholar may be taught otherwise upon the Stock of his Acumen, but not a whole School: Selden, Table. Table, p. 68 (1868). 1818 Milton's divine poem of the Paradise Lost may have come under your observation, and stood the text of your crucial acumen: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. II. ch. ii p. xoo (1819). 1842 I...shall still think them two men | Till some Sage proves the fact 'with his usual acumen': Barham, Ingolds Leg., p. 249 (1865)

acupictor, sb.: Late Lat.: embroiderer.

1696 Acupictor, (lat) an Embroiderer in needlework, as it were a Painter with a Needle: Phillips, World of Words (5th Ed.)

*ad captandum [vulgus], phr.: Lat.: 'to catch (the vulgar)', of an argument or statement; also ad captum vulgi.

1621 As for those places of scripture which oppugn it [the study of mathematics, &c] they will have spoken ad captum vulgi, and if rightly understood & favourably interpreted not at all against it: R. Burton, Anat Mel, Pt 2, Sec 2, Mem 2, p 327 (1867). 1762 These paltry tricks ad captundum vulgius can have no effect but on ideots: SmolLett, Launc Greaves, ch v Wks, Vol v p 91 (1877) 1780 I said this was a figure of thetoric, employed by his Lordship ad captundum vulgius I believe so still, but I believe he meant it also ad captundum regem. J. ADAMS, Lett, Diplom Corresp., Vol. IV. p. 408 (Boston, 1829) 1811 only to write 'ad captundum vulgius': Byron, in Moore', Life, Vol II p 62 (1832) 1837 such an ad captundum argument, as the offer of half a gunea: C DICKENS, Fukroick, ch x p 95 1838 showy and ad captundum arguments: Standard, Oct 12, p 5/3 1836 The tale has a sort of ad captundum interest: Atheneum, Feb 6, p. 198/3.

ad clērum, phr.: Low Lat.: 'to the clergy'; a discourse to the clergy was called shortly a clerum.

1673-80 there was a sermon ad clerum first. Gab. Harvey, Lett. Bk., p. 3 (1884) 1642 by sermons ad clerum he caused such a "spring" among divines as was not seen in many years before. Th. Fuller, cleck Red., Vol. II. p. 290 (1867).

ad crumenam, phr.: Lat.: 'to the purse', of an argument or appeal.

1759 Then, added my father, making use of the argument ad crumenam,—I will lay twenty guineas to a single crown-piece: STERNE, Trist. Shandy, Vol. II. ch xii Wks, p. 79 (1839).

ad esse: Late Lat. See esse.

ad eundem [gradum], phr.: Low Lat.: 'to the same (degree)', of the admission of a graduate of one University to the same degree at another without examination; metaph. of admission of a member of any one society into another.

OI AGMISSION OI A MEMDER OI ANY ONE SOCIETY INTO ANOTHER.

1711 you are invited to be admitted ad eundem at CAMBRIDGE: Spectator, No. 78, May 30, p. 126/2 (Morley).

1730 Dr. Middleton was presented ad eundem by the Margaret professor, Dr. Jenner: Thos. Hearne, Remains, in Lib. of Old Authors, Vol. III. p. 58 (1869)

1598 F. Wither, Tr. Dariot's Astrolog., sig. P 3 vo. 1615 Almuten Alchochoden of the stars attend you: Albumazar, ii, 5, in Dodsley-Hazlit's Old Plays, Vol. xi. p. 345. 1621 the Almutens, lords and planets there. R. Burton, Anat Mel, Pt 3, Sec. 2, Mem. 6, Subs 5, Vol. II. p 407 (1827). 1625 your Almutens, Alma cantarras: B Jonson, Stap. of News, ii. 4, p. 28 (1621) 1659 Yenus, in the west angle, the house of marriage the seventh house, in trine of Mars, in conjunction of Luna; and Mars Almuthen, or lord of the horoscope: MASSINGER, Cety Madam, ii. 2, Wks, p. 322/2 (1839). 1665 a Witch that understood the Almuten of his nativity: Sir Th. Herbert, Trav., p. 178 (1677).

[Corruption of almutez. Loth, Morgenländ. Forsch., p. 290f., also gives the form almobtez which proves the word to be for Arab. al-mubtazz, = 'the robber', i.e. the planet strong enough to take away the influence of the others in the horoscope. The termination is accounted for by the forms Almutes, Almutem, Almutam, Almubtem, given by Bonatti (see Alchochoden); a quasi-Lat. acc. in -em, -en being formed from -es treated as an inflexional ending.]

*Alnaschar: Arab. Al-nashshār, 'the lawyer': a character in one of the Arabian Nights Tales in Galland's version, a poor man who, having nothing but a basket of glass-ware for sale, dreams that by successful trade he rears on this small basis so large a fortune that he marries a princess. In his insolence he kicks the princess of his dream, and wakes to find that he has kicked over and destroyed his glass. He represents any victim of baneful illusions anticipative of unmerited high fortune.

1712 Aluaschar was entirely swallowed up in this Chimerical Vision, and could not forbear acting with his Foot what he had in his Thoughts. Spectator, No. 535, Nov. 13, p. 762/1 (Morley).

1812 Already with maternal Aluascharism she had in her reveries thrown back her head in disdain: M. Edusworfu, Vivian, ch. i. p. 12 (1832).

1845 In Aluaschar-like moods a man fancies himself a noble patron, and munificent rewarder of artists: That Kenay, Miss. Essays, p. 272 (1885).

1850 you won't scorn me as the worthless idler and spendthrift, when you see that I—when I have achieved a—psha! what an Aluaschar I am because I have made five pounds by my poems: — Pendennis, Vol 1. ch. xxxii. p. 365 (1879).

1866 Already had my Aluaschar-fundey...expended...the funds: J. R. Lowell, Biglow Papers, No. viii (Halifax).

arsis, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἄρσις,='a lifting'.

1. In Greek orchestric rhythm the arsis answered to the raising of the foot, the thesis (q. v.) to the lowering of the foot and its stay on the ground. Some of the Greek metrists transferred the words from the human foot to the voice and so confused the arsis with the metrical accent or ictus (q, v)of a verse foot which caused a raising of the voice; these have been followed by Latin metrists and most modern scholars, e.g. Bentley and Hermann. The metrical ictus or arsis is further confused with stress (see accent 2) in modern times.

1830 After the example of Bentley, we call that time in which the ictus is, the arsis, and those times, which are without the ictus, the thesis. J SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. I. ch. 11 p 4. 1833 [See anacrusis]

2. Music. descent of voice from higher to lower pitch. See per arsin. In old Gk. music an arsis corresponded to the accentuated part of a bar.

GAULE, Mag-astro-mancer, p. 109. 1675 I will. glance at their Dogmata, the Divine Axioms they delivered: J. SMITH, Christ, Ralig, Appeal, Bk. 1. ch. v. § 2, p. 24. 1678 that famous Axiom, so much talked of amongst the Ancients, De Nihilo Nihil, in Nihilum Nil posse reverti: Cudworth, Intell. Syst., Bk. 1. ch. i. p. 30.

2. an axioma medium, in the Baconian philosophy, a generalisation from experience.

1625 a Number of subtile and intricate Axiomes, and Theorems: Bacon, Ess., xxvii. p. 345 (1871). bef. 1627 Wee haue Three that Drawe the Experiments of the Former Foure into Titles, and Tables, to give the better light, for the drawing of Observations and Axiomes out of them: New Atlantis, p. 44. 1843 The principles of Ethology are properly the middle principles, the axiomata media (as Bacon would have said) of the science of mind. Bacon has judiciously observed that the axiomata media of every science principally constitute its value: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. II. p. 447 (1856).

3. a proposition (which the propounder deems fit to be stated).

1603 he hath written nothing of Syllogismes, of Axiomes: Holland, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1265. 1666 In doing this, he advances certain Axioms, and Conclusions: Phil. Trans., Vol. 1. No. 17, p. 308.

*axis, pl. axes, sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. axis, pl. axēs,='axle', 'axle-tree', 'axis of the earth', 'the north pole', 'pin of a hinge': also axe, fr. Fr. axe.

I. axis of revolution, central line about which revolution or rotation is made, or is supposed to be made.

I. I. axle of a wheel.

bef 1619 The weightines of the wheele doth settle it vpon his Axis: FOTHERBY, Atheom, II xl. § r [N. E D] 1725 the Axis of a Cutlers Grind-Stone. Bradley, Fam. Dict., s.v. Windmill.

I. I a. the axle of a wheel and axle (axis in peritrochio), one of the mechanical powers.

1673 This Chain is put over a large Axis deeply furrowed, from which it hangs down into a Well of Water. J RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 5

I. 1 b metaph. the pivot or hinge on which a matter turns; also, the main prop or support of anything.

Ep., 8k. vi ch vii p 252 (1686). 1665 Jupiter might then be said to turn upon his Axe. Phil Trans., Vol. 1 No 1, p 3. 1712 a Sun moving on its own Axis Spectator, No 472, Sept. 1, p 675 (Morley) 1856 as if the axis of his eyes were united to his backbone, and only moved with the trunk. Emerson, Engl Traits, vi Wks., Vol 11 p. 46 (Bohn, 1866).

I. 2 a. the imaginary straight line by the revolution of a plane figure about which solids are generated (hypothetically), whose sections at right angles to this line are circles through the centre of which the line passes, as a cone, a cylinder, a sphere.

1570 The axe of a Sphere is that right line which abideth fixed, about which the semicircle was moued: Billingslev, Eucl., Bk xi. Def. 13, fol 316 70. 1571 the Axis or Altitude of the Cone. Diggs, Pantom., III. 11i. Q ij b. [N.E. D.] 1579 the Axis of the Peece: — Stratiot., p. 186. 1646 when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane. Sir Th. Brown, Pseud. Ep., Bk. III. ch. xx. p. 123 (1686). 1672 an maginary Line, lying almost like the Axis of a Cylinder between the opposite ends: R. Boyle, Virtues of Gems, p. 70

II. axis of symmetry.

II. 1. an imaginary line about which the parts of a regular figure or a regular solid (not being a solid of revolution, see I. 2 a) lie symmetrically. In a conic section the major axis is the diameter which passes through the foci or focus, the minor axis is the diameter at right angles to the major axis, but sometimes any diameter of a curve, i.e. any straight line which bisects a system of parallel chords, is called an axis.

1671 The Plane of the Axis is a Section wherein is the Axe of the Chrystal, which is composed of the Axes of the Pyramids, and the Axe of the Columne H. O., Tr. N. Steno's Prodrom. on Solids in Solids, p. 53.

1776 Hutton, Math. Dict., 1. 177.

II. 2. an imaginary line marking a more or less symmetrical division of anything.

1845 The lofty mountains on the north side compose the granitic axis, or backbone of the country: C. Darwin, Yourn. Beagle, ch. x. p. 224. 1888 the longer axis of the city: Academy, Jan. 31, p. 49/2.

Bot. (a) the axis of inflorescence, the central line about which the organs of inflorescence are symmetrically arranged; (b) the line of the main stem and root.

a. 1741 It opens from the point to the basis into seven or eight parts, hollow'd gutterwise, which joining with the Axis that runs through the middle of it, form so many Apartments full of Seeds: J. OZELL, Tr. Tournefort's Voy. Levant, Vol. III. p. 63.

III. Techn. In many sciences axis denotes a medial or central line, or a main line of direction: e.g. Geol., anticlinal axis, an imaginary line on opposite sides of which strata curve or slope downward; synclinal axis, an imaginary line on opposite sides of which strata curve or slope upward; Optics, the straight line from the eye to the object of vision, a ray passing through the centre of a lens or system of lenses: Magnetism, an imaginary line joining a pair of magnetic poles: Physiol., a main line of growth or development; axiscylinder, a central substance of nervous matter in a nerve.

B, b, be: Mus.: name of the third and tenth notes of Guido Aretno's Great Scale, the seventeenth being formerly indicated by bb. It appears that our Bb, which answers to the old B fa mi the tenth note, and B fa mi in alt the seventeenth note of the Great Scale, when they fell in the third and sixth hexachords (causing them to be called soft), was anciently regarded as the normal sound of B called B molle; while our B answers to the third note of the Great Scale and to the tenth and seventeenth notes when they fell in the fourth and seventh, or hard hexachords; so that the third note of the Great Scale, B mi, was distinguished as #, B quarre ('squared'), written H in German. Eventually became the sign for 'natural', and b, which is 'round B', the sign for 'flat'. In modern English music, B, also called Si. stands for the seventh note in the scale of C major. B molle was early Anglicised, through Fr. Bemol, as bemol(e), beemoll (= 'semitone' in Bacon's Nat. Hist., Cent. ii. § 104). See bemi.

*basaltes, Lat., basalt ($\angle \angle$), Eng. fr. Lat.: sb.: hard Trap rock with a tendency to become columnar as in the Giant's Causeway in the North of Ireland, and in the island of Staffa off Scotland. Apparently not Anglicised before the middle of the 18 c. See Lyell, Man. of Geol., ch. xxviii. According to Pliny the word is Egyptian and connotes the resemblance to iron of the blackish hard gray Egyptian variety which he describes, which was most used for statues in the Ptolemaic period and for sarcophagi and other ornamental work from the earliest times.

1601 The Aegyptians also found in Aethyopia another kind of marble, which they call Basaltes, resembling yron as well in colour as hardnesse; and thereupon it took the name. Holland, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 36, ch. 7, Vol. II, p. 572.
1694 Our Irish Basaltes is composed of Columns Mollynsux, Giants Causeway, in Phil. Trans., XVIII. 181. [N. E.D.] 1765 the statues of Rome. are generally of basaltes, portphyry, or oriental grante. Smollett, France & Italy, XXXIII Wks., Vol. v. p. 510 (1817) 1797 Iceland abounds with pillars of basaltes, which the lower sort of people imagine have been piled upon each other by the giants, who made use of supernatural force to effect it: Encyc.
